

Hubert Kleinpeter, PhD, holds degrees in Government, Social Science and Foundations of Education with program studies in public administration and social science from Florida State University.

Public practice: liaison and senior researcher to the Office of Florida Governor for the University of Miami, Sylvester Cancer Institute; instructor of sociology and research methods at Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University; and instructor of social science of education, College of Education, Florida State University.

Private practice: international/intercultural Development of Education practice engaged in teaching, advising and publishing social knowledge. Member of the Comparative International Education Society and the American Educational Studies Association; an author and publisher of the social sciences archived at the University of Oxford Bodleian Social Science Library, and the University of Cambridge Library.

He is an advanced TESOL instructor proficient in Spanish and Mandarin school settings; a certified public school teacher holding Expert and Model Teacher credentials issued by the Bureau of Public Education, Shanxi, China; in Cambodia, an observer of primary and vocation school development for funded research; and in Central America, advisor to multilateral entities assisting runaway and abandoned street children.

From South Florida, He apprenticed in the mechanical and marine vocational arts. Experienced with “working of hand and mind together” as a shipwright, He is a proponent of vocational schools promoting social progress through economic development.